

Extended CV – Rabbi Lord Jonathan Sacks

March 8, 1948: Jonathan Sacks born in London, the eldest of four children of Louis (d.1996), a businessman who sold cloth in a small shop in London's East End, and Louisa "Libby" Frumkin (d. 2010), who worked in her family's wine business. Both parents are active as volunteers in their synagogue. A family of modest means, his parents instill in him enormous devotion to education, Judaism and wider society, a blend of secularism and religion that would become the template of his lifelong pursuits.

1952-1959: Attends Saint Mary's Primary School in the Finchley area of North London, near the family's home.

1959-1966: Attends Christ's College School, Finchley. Although a Christian institution, about half of the students are Jewish yet none of the school's teachers are, so he helps organize and lead morning assemblies for the Jewish students. Beginning at age 15 he increasingly embraces this role, later crediting it as instrumental in preparing for a life of outreach. The teachers' respect for and encouragement of his faith also prove influential in his understanding that difference does not have to mean division.

1966: Enters Gonville & Caius College, one of the oldest colleges at the University of Cambridge, and studies for a philosophy degree focused on Moral Science, a discipline that applies scientific methodology to the understanding of morality.

1968: While a student at Cambridge, a two-month visit to the United States leads to what will be life-changing encounters with Rabbi Joseph Soloveitchik, dean of the Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary at Yeshiva University in New York, and the Lubavitcher Rebbe, Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson, who urges him to seek rabbinic ordination.

Specifically, Soloveitchik enlightens him to the ability of Judaism to not only withstand the challenges of modern thought but to thrive within that environment. He is also deeply influenced by Schneerson's emphasis on eagerly sharing the lessons and values of Jewish faith not just with Jews but with all of humanity. He later sums up these encounters as: "The Rebbe challenged me to lead. Rabbi Soloveitchik challenged me to think."

1969: Awarded 1st Class Honours Degree in Moral Science (Philosophy) from Gonville & Caius College, University of Cambridge. Cambridge also awards him a Rhonda Research Fellowship at Gonville & Caius in Moral Philosophy, studying under Prof. Bernard Williams.

1970: Marries Elaine Taylor, a radiographer (no longer practicing). They have three children: Joshua, Dina, and Gila.

Research in Moral Philosophy at New College, University of Oxford.

1971: Appointed Lecturer in Moral Philosophy at Middlesex Polytechnic.

1972: Earns a masters in Moral Philosophy at New College.

1973: Appointed Lecturer in Jewish philosophy at Jews' College, London (now known as the London School of Jewish Studies), the world's oldest rabbinical seminary.

1976: Receives rabbinic ordination from Jews' College and Yeshiva Etz Chaim, London.

1978: Appointed Rabbi of Golders Green Synagogue, a modern Orthodox congregation in North West London.

1981: Receives Ph.D. in Collective Responsibility from the philosophy and theology department of King's College London.

1982: Appointed to the Chief Rabbi Lord Jakobovits' Chair in Modern Jewish Thought at Jews' College.

1983: Appointed Rabbi of the prestigious Marble Arch Synagogue, a modern Orthodox congregation in Central London.

1984: Appointed Principal of Jews' College, London, serving until 1990. In this position he develops a "practical rabbinics" program, focusing on supporting rabbis in their pastoral work in the community.

1989: Visiting Professor of Philosophy at the University of Essex.

1990: Delivers the BBC Reith Lectures, a radio lecture series commissioned and presented each year by a leading public figure, on "The Persistence of Faith," vigorously challenging the view that religious faith in Europe was in a state of terminal decline. His first book, Tradition in an Untraditional Age, is published. It explores a wide range of studies including the Holocaust, Jewish-Christian dialogue and Jewish economic ethics and offers a distinct outlook for Jewish thought in the modern era.

1991: Named Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, the sixth Chief Rabbi since the role was formalized in 1845, and the tenth since the office was created in 1704. He follows in the footsteps of Lord (Immanuel) Jakobovits, who won the Templeton Prize earlier that year.

In response to the widely held and, to him, deeply dismaying notion that the Anglo-Jewish community was in a state of decline, he issues a call for a "Decade of Renewal" aimed at revitalizing "British Jewry's great powers of creativity." He outlines five central values: love of every Jew, love of learning, love of God, a profound contribution to British society and an unequivocal attachment to Israel.

During the next ten years, he establishes and helps nurture a bold set of initiatives to foster this renewal, including the Jewish Association for Business Ethics, which so successfully flourished that it eventually became an independent organization. Another initiative, Women's Review, tackled controversial issues such as the role of women in prayer (tefillah), divorce (agunah), and lay leadership and education.

He also founded Jewish Continuity, an educational foundation focused on maintaining and enriching the Jewish identity. It employs modern marketing tactics to build awareness of the implications of assimilation and out marriage, that is, a marriage between a Jew and a non-Jew. Controversy over the appropriateness of the foundation's funding of non-orthodox religious activities was largely resolved when Jewish Continuity merged with the Jewish Israel Appeal to create the United Jewish Israel Appeal.

Named President of the Council of Christians and Jews and President of the London School of Jewish Studies. Arguments for the Sake of Heaven published.

Many of Sacks' books published during this period explore the many elements put forth as part of the Decade of Renewal. The Persistence of Faith, based on the 1990 BBC Reith Lectures, published.

1992: Crisis and Covenant: Jewish Thought after the Holocaust published.

1993: One People: Tradition, Modernity and Jewish Unity published.

1994: Will We Have Jewish Grandchildren? published.

1995: Faith in the Future published. Community of Faith published.

1996: Cook Lecturer at the Universities of Oxford, St. Andrews and Edinburgh.

1997: The Politics of Hope published.

1998: Named Visiting Professor of Theology and Religious Studies at King's College, serving until 2013, as well as Visiting Professor at Hebrew University, Jerusalem, serving until 2004.

2000: Celebrating Life published. A Letter in the Scroll published, and receives a 2000 National Jewish Book Award (USA).

2001: The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Rt. Hon. Rev. George Carey, awards him an honorary Doctor of Divinity degree at Lambeth Palace to mark his first ten years in office, only the second time such an honor is bestowed upon a Jewish leader.

Begins his second decade as Chief Rabbi by calling for "Jewish responsibility," a renewed commitment to the ethical dimension of Judaism. The new decade finds his public outreach gaining an ever-widening audience, including publishing at least one book every year, regularly contributing to the BBC Radio 4 "Thought for the Day," a reflection on issues of faith, and writing the Credo column in The Times, with thoughts and advice on a broad field of Jewish values and law, including the Torah, that offers readers guideposts in wrestling with the difficult choices of the modern world.

A Letter in the Scroll published in the UK as Radical Then, Radical Now.

2002: The Dignity of Difference published. It is awarded the Grawemeyer Prize for Religion (USA) in 2004.

2003: The Jonathan Sacks Haggada, a fresh and insightful take on the text for the Passover Seder, published.

2004: From Optimism to Hope published. Begins his commentary, Covenant and Conversation, on the weekly Torah reading. He calls these studies Covenant & Conversation because this, for him, is the essence of what Torah learning is: the text of Torah is the Jewish people's covenant with God, and the interpretation of this text is their ongoing conversation with the Divine word that continues to this day. Its current circulation of more than 20,000 subscribers is augmented through photocopies commonly distributed in synagogues around the world. The essays are compiled into books starting in 2009.

2005: Made Knight Bachelor in the Queen's Birthday Honours "for services to the Community and to Inter-faith Relations." To Heal a Fractured World published.

2006: The Authorised Daily Prayer Book published. It becomes the leading prayer book for Jewish communities in the UK.

2007: The Home We Build Together published.

2008: Addresses a plenary session of the Lambeth Conference on the topic “Faith and Fate,” the first rabbi so honored. Named Visiting Professor at Birkbeck College, University of London.

2009: Awarded a Life Peerage in the House of Lords where he sits on the cross benches, seats occupied by members who have no political-party affiliation, as Baron Sacks of Aldgate in the City of London.

Covenant and Conversation: Genesis published. It receives a 2009 National Jewish Book Award (USA). Future Tense published. The Koren Sacks Siddur published, the first in a series using texts designed by master typographer Eliyahu Koren. It becomes a leading prayer book for Jewish communities worldwide.

2010: Delivers the keynote welcome address on the occasion of the visit of Pope Benedict XVI to Great Britain. Covenant and Conversation: Exodus published.

2011: The Great Partnership: God, Science and the Search for Meaning published. The Koren Sacks Rosh Hashana Mahzor published. For the UK, this represents the first time in a century that a new set of Mahzorim (festival prayer books) has been published.

2012: The Koren Sacks Yom Kippur Mahzor published.

June 24, 2013: At a gala dinner in advance of the completion of his time as Chief Rabbi, Sacks is honored by the presence of HRH The Prince of Wales as guest of honor, together with video messages from UK Prime Minister Rt Hon David Cameron MP and the three previous prime ministers (Gordon Brown, Tony Blair and Sir John Major), The Most Reverend and Rt Hon Justin Welby, the Archbishop of Canterbury and the two previous Archbishops of Canterbury (Lord Williams, Lord Carey), and The Most Reverend Vincent Nichols, the Archbishop of Westminster, among others. At the dinner, HRH The Prince of Wales says: “As a valued adviser, your guidance on any given issue has never failed to be of practical value and deeply grounded in the kind of wisdom that is increasingly hard to come by.... Your counsel reminds me of that of Solomon. ‘Those who trust in him will understand truth, and the faithful will abide with him in love.’”

September 1, 2013: Steps down as Chief Rabbi, and is succeeded by Rabbi Ephraim Mirvis.

Fall 2013: Appointed Professor of Judaic Thought at New York University; Professor of Jewish Thought at Yeshiva University, New York; and Professor of Law, Ethics and the Bible at King’s College, London.

The Koren Sacks Pesach Mahzor published. It receives a 2014 National Jewish Book Award (USA).

2015: Covenant and Conversation: Leviticus published. Not in God’s Name: Confronting Religious Violence published. Not in God’s Name becomes a top-ten Sunday Times bestseller, is widely praised in the UK, US and worldwide, and receives a 2015 National Jewish Book Award (USA). A US book tour includes engagements at The Brookings Institution, The Council on Foreign Relations, and many prominent academic institutions including Harvard and Princeton.

Lessons in Leadership: A Weekly Reading of the Jewish Bible published. A whiteboard animation video on Jewish identity, “Why I Am a Jew,” which includes subtitles in multiple languages, logs more than one million views online and is shown by Jewish schools, communities and organizations around the world.

2016: Awarded honorary doctorate from Tel Aviv University. Awarded 2016 Templeton Prize at a ceremony in London for his “exceptional contribution to affirming life’s spiritual dimension, whether through insight, discovery, or practical works.” Awarded The Bradley Prize in Washington DC.

The Koren Sacks Shavuot Mahzor and The Koren Sacks Sukkot Mahzor published.
Essays in Ethics: A Weekly Reading of the Jewish Bible published.
